

Report on Breast Cancer Awareness Programme at Boinchtala Village

A Breast Cancer Awareness Programme was successfully conducted at Boinchtala village, drawing active participation from local residents, particularly women. Organised at the village community hall, the event saw the presence of over 35 women along with student volunteers, reflecting strong community interest and engagement.

The programme was led by Dr. Prasenjit Chatterjee, whose informative session focused on the importance of early detection, regular screening, and timely treatment of breast cancer. He addressed common misconceptions around breast health and stressed the need for self-examination as a simple yet effective method for early detection. His talk also covered available medical treatments and supportive care for those diagnosed with the disease.

In addition to medical awareness, the session highlighted various government schemes and welfare initiatives aimed at improving the health and well-being of women and children. Volunteers helped facilitate the interaction, ensuring that the information was accessible and relevant to the local context.

The initiative aimed to break the stigma and silence around breast cancer, particularly in rural areas where healthcare outreach remains limited. It also encouraged women to seek timely medical help and avail the benefits of government-supported health programmes.

Overall, the programme was a meaningful step toward empowering women through health education and community support. The positive response from participants reinforced the need for continued awareness drives and healthcare initiatives at the grassroots level.
